In the morning we were taken around a waste landfill and it was very interesting. We could see for ourselves the different methods of sorting out the waste.

Contrary to France, the place we visited sorts out not only waste but also was a former landfill first created in 1978. We also saw a piping system whose design was to gather methane in order to avoid explosions within the landfill.

In the afternoon, we went to Coblenz where we visited a museum relating the impact of the river Mosel onto human and animal activities.

Finally and most importantly we had 2 hours to go shopping in the town centre to buy last-minute souvenirs for our friends and relatives. Coblenz is really a lovely town.
